50 SHADES OF BDSM OBSESSION UNCHAINS SEX ON TV

The Guardian

Tapped up Charlie Murphy as Anna and Richard Armitage as William in Obsession

Obsession, a tale of lust between a woman and her boyfriend's dad, is bringing BDSM to mainstream TV. Zoe Williams discusses leather, ribbons and 'all-consuming orgasms' with its writer and stars

'If you've never felt like this, I pity you'

From everyone who has made the Netflix series Obsession – the writer, Morgan Lloyd Malcolm, the leads, Richard Armitage and Charlie "Happy Valley" Murphy – I want to know the following: when did they read the book on which it is based, Damage, by Josephine Hart; have they seen the film, starring Juliette Binoche and Jeremy Irons; and did they spend the whole early 90s talking about it? Lloyd Malcolm loves the book and has never seen the film. Neither appeared on Armitage's radar at the time. And Murphy, well, she was only three when it was published in 1991.

Damage was the 50 Shades of its day – propulsive, original and extremely widely read. It had a similar lightning-rod impact to 50 Shades, as a breezy, middlebrow way in to quite a big conversation about sex. The plot centres on a respected surgeon – a rounded, well-liked man, yada yada – who meets his son's girlfriend and immediately starts having an affair with her, with appalling consequences. It was distinctly of its time: a world still suffused with HIV anxiety, trying to build back taboos around sexual transgression that previous decades had destroyed with their permissiveness, by creating situations so unforgivable, and imagining punishments so radically disproportionate, that somehow Old Testament values might be restored. Think Fatal Attraction, remove the boiled rabbit, and still the consequences for the surgeon are way worse. It always felt to me like the fever dream of the wronged wife, awake at 4am, trying to think of the worst possible person her husband could be having an affair with, then the direst imaginable comeuppance. Lloyd Malcolm agrees, carefully: "I don't want to speak too much on what Josephine intended because she's not around to defend anything any more. But I do feel like this is one of her more personal books, and she was working through a lot." Hart died in 2011, happily married to Maurice Saatchi, but her previous marriage – well, it wasn't quite so successful.

The thrust of Obsession is broadly as Armitage describes: "Has anybody ever stepped into your life who has given you that sense of overwhelming, indescribable physical obsession? If they have, did you end up in a relationship with them or did you choose to walk away? If they haven't, I pity you. Because everyone should feel that." But as Lloyd Malcolm says, "The book is so particular about the kind of sex they're having and the way they do it and how that feeds into their relationship." That's a dominant-submissive relationship, which the original film didn't have a clue what to do with. Louis Malle, the director, swapped out all the momentum and subversiveness of the BDSM dynamic for a broad-brush sexual urgency that relied pretty heavily on the magnetism of Jeremy Irons.

Obsession has sought to restore that. "It was really important to me to not be saying anything like: 'BDSM sex is bad sex,'" says Lloyd Malcolm. Yet it has to be quite a vanilla version of kink, because it's mainstream TV – much like the film of 50 Shades, in fact, it's a lot of ribbon and restraint and blindfolding, unlike "the porn version of things", Lloyd Malcolm says, "which would be very intense, very dark, lots of leather. There's a certain kind of costume that you're expecting." Representing BDSM with Japanese silk ropes is almost metaphorical; it's such a niche part of the kink. It works because this is not a how-to, but ultimately about their relationship and "who is in control of it", says Lloyd Malcolm. "For me, it was always Anna [the girlfriend]. Every single scenario. These two aliens from another planet have found each other and they both have this need in them that they can meet in each other." From the moment the two meet, Charlie Murphy says, "she is completely in control. This is physically her world. She is the architect of every single rule. She is the dominant submissive, and the power she gives to him is a very cathartic experience for her."

It's probably only now, when intimacy coaches on set are routine, that you could even make a drama in which the sex is a driving part of the plot, rather than something decorative. Armitage describes the before-world with comic haplessness: "The director would say: 'I'll put the camera on. I won't call cut, you just do your thing.' They'd close the set and then they'd leave. So then you have to do all of that work with your scene partner. You're like: OK, what are we gonna do? We can't have sex because that's a whole other industry, that's porn. Some people did as a badge of honour, I just really disliked that. In the same way that when I climbed over a table and glued a man on to a wheelchair and bit his face off in Hannibal, I wanted some choreography. They'd never do a fight scene by saying: 'Just punch each other. Just beat each other up.'" Besides, as Murphy says: "I don't want to draw on my own sexual experience. I want to feel like I'm coming at it from Anna's perspective, and feel protected by that."

Murphy was filming this simultaneously with the third season of Happy Valley, and while she didn't choose it deliberately as a counterpoint, the characters could not be more different if she had, and there are obvious career upsides: "There might be opportunities outside police force work now," she says drily. She is, of course, Ann Gallagher, the kidnap victim turned plucky police recruit; resilient, wholesome everywoman. The roles are pretty different.

Culture has also done a bit of work on itself in terms of gaze: is it always a male gaze? Is the male character more fully drawn? Can you even figure out what the female character is playing at, or is she too beautiful to need a motivation? This was a massive flaw in the book, which is entirely told from the perspective of the surgeon. Books are allowed to have narrators and some of them have to be male, but Anna is "such a slight version of herself, she's almost this spectre that slips into the family and blows everything up," says Lloyd Malcolm. "I wanted to make sure we filled her out more, understood her more. That doesn't mean we have to like her and all the things she does. I mean, I ended up with a huge amount of love for her. I just wanted to give her a massive hug."

The script has stepped up to fix the deficiencies of the book, but it's testament to Murphy's incredible screen presence that you find yourself allying with her ages before her backstory emerges to give you any good reason to. Armitage, too, hands in a remarkably convincing performance as dominant; in real life he's very submissive. If he starts on a thought and decides not to follow through, you just have to tell him to, then he does. For instance: "Some people will watch this and think: 'I hope to God that person never walks into my field of vision.' And some people will feel like: 'I want to feel that.' It's a bit like ... oh, I'd better not go there." "You have to." "Well, I'm sure there are people in the world who have never had an all-consuming orgasm. You're missing a large part of being human."

But if TV has largely evolved so female characters can't be ciphers any more, and kink doesn't have to be etched out of a plot to which it is actually central, there is also more contention around BDSM, more people who would challenge it as a legitimate preference and say that it's women internalising male violence. "I don't think we're ever going to get to a point of consensus around it," says Lloyd Malcolm. "What I hope we've done is show a relationship that is, in essence, destructive, but that's not related to the kind of sex they're having."

"It's not even gender reversal, where she's calling the shots and giving him the permission to dominate her," says Armitage. "It's beyond that: a push and pull between two adults, exploring what their kinks are. He doesn't even know, and that's part of the attraction. It's not about props. It's about freedom." Murphy calls Armitage's character a frog in the water, "slowly boiling, until there's no getting out of it". Of her own, she says: "I like to think of her as ink. Anything she touches, anything she's been around, there's this bleed of her, this inkiness. That's the kind of substance she is."

The funny thing is, the whole show retains the appeal of the original 90s morality sex fable, which is an intense melodrama, with baroque detailing, the sense of an authorial subconscious gaping open, and the central question: what's the worst that could happen if you let your appetites overwhelm you? You unleash the apocalypse, idiot! It's just that it took another 30 years before the screen could shed its squeamishness and try to tell it. Obsession is on Netflix on 13 April.

Beef

Ali Wong and Steven Yeun's riveting, rage-fuelled drama is something to shout about

Joel Golby

There's a lot to love about Beef, the new A24/Netflix show (out Thursday) you're going to spend the next few weeks hearing about, but one of my favourites is how clearly and surely it looks LA in the eye. We all know the facts: there are only three cities in the world, and those are LA, London and New York. I have never heard of another city in my entire life. And in recent years, TV shows that set themselves in these places (so: 95% of all TV shows) have been knowingly shy about it, as if they are an Oxford undergraduate refusing to admit their dad is rich: yes, these shows say, yes we are in London. But look! We're not in the posh or obvious bits, alright! Look, here's Victoria Park! Here's Larry's in Peckham! Didn't expect that, did you?

Beef is not like this. The central, well, beef – down-on-his-luck handyman Steven Yeun and up-on-her-luck-but-unsatisfied-anyway plant artist Ali Wong get into a road rage altercation that overtakes both of their lives (what a pitch!) – is completely of and informed by LA, a city that can only be navigated angrily in a car. On the side of Wong's Amy, there's a perfect lampooning of luxe-hippy culture: dinner club mushroom trips, vaping weed cross-legged in a business meeting before perusing a panic room catalogue, big floppy hats and beautiful cardigans, intimacy exercises, thinking your toddler is an artist, extremely expensive chairs.

Yeun's Danny lives in the flipside of a divided city: having a cousin you can't really trust, outdoor weightlifting, flickering motel lights and wonky signage, cash-in-hand jobs, having the main thing you own be a van from 2006, fast food for most meals and not really knowing what your credit score is, trying to find absolution in the church. When they collide in the opening scenes – and devolve into the resulting beef that guides and energises them both throughout the series – you see two people at the end of two very different sets of nerves, both powered by the same fuel.

If that sounds exhausting, it isn't. Beef, despite the name and all the promotional shots of Wong and Yeun screaming at each other, rarely descends into unnecessary yelling (something has happened to me over the past couple of years where I don't really enjoy watching people yell on TV now. It's made watching It's Always Sunny ... quite tricky.) Instead, what it does is so much subtler and cleverer: the initial beef splinters through their lives like a chip in the windshield, becoming an obsession for both of them. We see the many complex and cultural layers to their family dynamics. We see how Wong's by-the-book perfect life just isn't hitting the way it should, and how Yeun's do-what-his-parents-say version isn't working out, either. We see some incredibly interesting new methods of getting revenge. There are a lot of fascinating ideas about old friendships, and family duty, and doing things right but not necessarily doing things for you, and all of that is contrasted so perfectly with the high spikes of psychotic behaviour they enact upon each other. They're not just mad at each other, they're mad at everything. And if slashing someone's tyres or ruining their aggregate Yelp review score helps alleviate that, so be it.

There's a perfect lampooning of luxe-hippy culture: vaping weed in a business meeting, thinking your toddler is an artist

Yeun has said that over the course of production, the crew started to refer to Beef as "dumb Heat". And you can see three crucial similarities between Michael Mann's essential 1995 blokecore masterpiece and this 10-part black comedy series: a central antagonistic relationship that lights both participants up with a new kind of energy, the hazy backdrop of beautiful LA, and some really interesting stuff with guns.

Beef isn't afraid to go to dark, weird places, it looks beautiful doing it and the episode titles read like a poem (when the opening titles for the first episode roared on to the screen – a smudgy modernist piece with the words The Birds Don't Sing, They Screech in Pain stretched taut over it – I literally said, out loud: "This is so cool"). We've had a good few weeks of TV, now the post-Christmas lull and the award-season pause is out of the way – The White Lotus became The Last of Us which segued neatly into Succession which can go back-to-back with this – but I truly think Beef might turn out to be one of the most interesting shows of the year.

Rain Dogs
Tuesday, 10.40pm, BBC One

Cash Carraway has adapted her striking 2019 memoir, Skint Estate, into this eight-part drama – and the result is authentic, original and well worth tuning in to. The excellent Daisy May Cooper plays sex worker and single mum Costello Jones, who is evicted from her home with daughter Iris (Fleur Tashjian). She can't find her best friend, Gloria (Ronke Adékoluejo) – last spotted hungover in a telephone box – so she reluctantly goes to slippery Selby (Jack Farthing), who is recently out of prison. Told with black humour, it's a plucky story of a mother and daughter's resilience and love as they fight to find a roof over their heads in modern Britain. Hollie Richardson

Pick of the day
Magpie Murders
9.15pm, BBC One
Based on Anthony Horowitz's novel, this meta murder mystery starring Lesley Manville was available on BritBox last year. The BBC has since snapped up the series, so here's a chance to watch the first season ahead of the upcoming second. Manville plays book editor Susan Ryeland, whose bestselling author Alan Conway is busy writing about an unsolved murder – until his body is found in the garden. Most intriguingly, Susan realises that he never finished the final chapter. HR

Celebrity Bridge of Lies
6.15pm, BBC One
TV "hard man" Ross Kemp returns to safer ground as celebrity broadcasters prepare to quiz. Radio icon Tony Blackburn joins forces with Radio 1's Katie Thistleton, Jazz FM's YolanDa Brown and Heart FM's Lauren Layfield. Navigating 32 stepping stones for charity, can they harness their inner lie detectors? Danielle De Wolfe

Bettany Hughes' Treasures of the World
7pm, Channel 4
Hughes visits Oman this week, once the home of civilisations that acquired their wealth through copper and frankincense – which is still harvested today. After visiting a bronze age beehive-shaped tomb, she journeys to the Musandam Peninsula. Jack Seale

Frank Sinatra: A Man and His Music + Ella + Jobim
7.35pm, BBC Two
In 1967, Ella Fitzgerald, Nelson Riddle and Antônio Carlos Jobim joined Frank Sinatra for a TV special. Between these greats, they performed hits such as The Lady Is a Tramp, The Girl from Ipanema and What Now My Love. Now, more than 50 years later, here it is again. HR

Challenge Anneka
8.30pm, Channel 5
It's the comeback we didn't know we needed. This week, Anneka Rice's volunteers have three days to create a mini-village for people with dementia. But seven shops, a carers' cafe and landscaped green space is a tall order in the timeframe. Phil Harrison

The Jonathan Ross Show
9.40pm, ITV1
Ahead of the release of a new album and a deeply personal documentary, Ed Sheeran has been headline fodder over the last couple of weeks. He joins Ross for a chat as well as a performance, alongside other guests Michael Bublé, Russell Crowe and Lily Allen. HR

A magical stage reimagining of Studio Ghibli's My Neighbour Totoro, a sexy, modern spin on Rodgers & Hammerstein's classic musical Oklahoma!, Paul Mescal's sellout turn in Tennessee Williams's A Streetcar Named Desire and a Jack and the Beanstalk panto with Dawn French – it's time to celebrate the best live productions of the last 12 months with the prestigious annual awards at the Royal Albert Hall. HR

Wild Isles
7pm, BBC One
Fresh water is "the lifeblood of the natural world" and the latest instalment of what could be Sir David's swansong series follows it from mountain waterfalls down to sprawling reedbeds. The footage of ravenous raft spiders and horny grebes is suitably striking but comes with a timely warning about how pollution degrades British rivers. Graeme Virtue

The Great Celebrity Bake Off for Stand Up to Cancer
7.40pm, Channel 4
More famous faces try not to act starstruck in front of Paul and Prue as the great charitable spin-off continues. Footie-daft actor David Morrissey, butter-wouldn't-melt comic Lucy Beaumont, Olympic diver Tom Daley and Radio 1 DJ Adele Roberts – who also shares her own cancer story – shower the judges with quiches and more. GV

Grace
8pm, ITV1
The last case of the year for John Simm's underegged detective is set amid the local music scene – always a tricky one for crime shows to portray credibly – with a subplot about human remains on a pig farm. As usual, the mix of dour subject matter and sedate storytelling makes a long episode feel endless. JS

Great Expectations
9pm, BBC One
"Love makes a fool of you," Miss Havisham (Olivia Colman) tells Pip (Fionn Whitehead) this week. Romance is but the latest lesson broached beneath the watchful gaze of Pip's educator, as he also grapples with French on his journey into a gentleman's world. Change is afoot, as a letter sent to lawyer Mr Jaggers (Ashley Thomas) changes everything. DDW

Simon Reeve's Return to Cornwall
9pm, BBC Two
The magnificently photogenic county of Cornwall has more than its fair share of economic and social problems, as the intrepid presenter Simon Reeve discovered when he last visited two summers ago. In a car park, Ali Wong's Amy angers Danny (Steven Yeun) as she cuts across him. He follows her, she flips him the bird – neither can let their grievance go. After this initial clash, they are wisely kept apart for most of the opening episode. They need to settle. But neither is undeserving of sympathy: Danny is a hot-headed striver with family problems and money worries; Amy is highly strung and painfully self-contained. Both are flirting with despair and soon, as a cycle of revenge begins to escalate, they become ciphers for each other's problems and their toxic relationship becomes symbiotic. It's a clever, black-hearted, funny and oddly touching two-hander. Phil Harrison

Tiny Beautiful Things

Disney+, from Friday

How well-adjusted is the typical agony aunt? As this comedy-drama (adapted from Cheryl Strayed's 2012 book) suggests, personal unhappiness isn't necessarily a bar to dishing out advice to strangers. Clare (Kathryn Hahn) is a middle-aged heroin addict turned writer with a failing marriage, a disappointed daughter and a despairing sense of existential drift. When the opportunity arises to take over an advice column, Dear Sugar, she initially scoffs. But could pondering other people's problems have a cathartic effect on her? Hahn is excellent as a woman just about holding it together. PH

Surviving R Kelly: Part III

Netflix, from Monday

The final instalment in the harrowing story of disgraced rapper R Kelly focuses on the 2021 trial that saw him found guilty of racketeering and sex trafficking. Appropriately, this season is very much focused on the courage and indefatigability of the survivors of Kelly's crimes, offering a frequently uncomfortable but very necessary insight into what it takes to face your abuser (and their expensively assembled legal team) across a courtroom. Expect revelations of the grimmest sort but also, hopefully, a measure of closure as justice is finally done. PH

Jury Duty

Freevee, from Friday

A bizarre and at times head-spinning documentary-style comedy that uses jury service as the jumping-off point for all manner of meta silliness. The idea is to chronicle a fictional trial through the eyes of one juror, Ronald Gladden. However, Gladden is unaware that the whole trial is fake and everyone involved except for him is an actor. What unfolds is a peculiar and, at times, hysterical exercise in bafflement, misdirection and commitment to concept. James Marsden (who is just the right level of semi-famous to work in this context) stars. PH

Boom! Boom! The World vs Boris Becker

Apple TV+, from Friday

While plenty of tennis players struggle with retirement, few have had quite as turbulent a second act to their lives as Boris Becker. But then, as this two-part documentary shows, from a young age Becker has lived a life of extremes. On the plus side of the ledger, he was Wimbledon champion at 17 and won 49 career titles. But subsequently, there have been personal problems, financial issues and eventually imprisonment for tax offences. Becker himself is interviewed here, along with tennis icons including Björn Borg and John McEnroe. PH

Transatlantic

Netflix, from Friday

An intriguing new drama from the Deutschland 83 creator Anna Winger, and like her earlier series, it takes real-life events and gives them a fictional spin. It tells the story of Varian Fry (Cory Michael Smith), a US journalist who found himself in occupied France during the second world war. Horrified, he helped found the Emergency Rescue Committee, an organisation that ferried Jews, artists and dissidents to safety. Among thousands of others, Fry helped rescue artists Marcel Duchamp and Marc Chagall and writer Hannah Arendt. A remarkable and undertold story. PH

Grease: Rise of the Pink Ladies

Paramount+, from Friday

Tell me more? Tell me more? Very well: this nicely realised origin story fleshes out the incipient high-school melodrama of the Grease universe, imagining events that took place four years before the film. It's 1954 and Rydell high school isn't a happy place: among the school's pupils are a disaffected posse of girls who can't find a niche. Cue the Pink Ladies, a rose-jacketed gang whose style and strut soon become infectious and influential. Marisa Davila, Cheyenne Isabel Wells, Ari Notartomaso and Tricia Fukuhara star. PH

An immaculate sci-fi comedy and the return of a classic

The Big Door Prize
Apple TV+

As irresistible premises go, this 10-part series has a great one. Adapted from MO Walsh's 2020 book of the same name, it uses the (largely unexplained) appearance of a machine that tells you your true life potential to explore that ever-fascinating question of whether there is such a thing as too much knowledge. That makes it sound weighty. It is not. It is funny, friendly and as beautifully light on its feet as you might expect from creator David West Read, who worked as a writer and producer on Schitt's Creek. He is hugely helped in this by the immaculate comic timing of Chris O'Dowd as amiable history teacher Dusty Hubbard. All of human life is here, but with jokes. It's Ted Lasso with the softest of sci-fi twists. Lucy Mangan

Blue Lights
BBC One/iPlayer

This is a busy period for high-concept police dramas, so you might be forgiven for thinking: "Oh God, not another one." Don't sleep on Blue Lights, though. It's well-crafted, fantastically tense, thrilling stuff, created by The Salisbury Poisonings' Declan Lawn and Adam Patterson. Set in Belfast, it follows three new and extremely green recruits to the Police Service of Northern Ireland, who have two months of their probationary period left to serve. If this action-stuffed opener is anything to go by, those two months are not going to slide by quietly. Setting the show in Belfast provides layers of social and political complexity, and this makes the policing of the city a fascinating framework for drama. There is gallows humour, too, but it is also brutal at times. By the end of the first episode, I'm engrossed. Rebecca Nicholson

Yellowjackets
Paramount+

There was so much to recommend in the first season of this contemporary horror, a word-of-mouth hit that switched between the past and the present, following the 1996 plane crash of a high school football team. This second season improves upon the first by keeping the audience perpetually on its toes, allowing for jump scares, body horror and some wonderfully imaginative twists. There are blackly comic and surreal elements, alongside a truly banging 90s alt-rock soundtrack, and Elijah Wood's role as an amateur detective sees him prove a perfect foil for Christina Ricci, who returns as misfit nurse Misty. Will our characters get away with the staggering number of crimes they have committed? Could Misty finally get a boyfriend? One thing that feels assured is Yellowjackets will continue to clear the high bar it sets for itself. Leila Latif

Great Expectations
BBC One/iPlayer

My goodness, is it that time already? The Great Expectations adaptation seems to come around quicker every decade, does it not? This year's is the work of the Peaky Blinders creator Steven Knight and stars Olivia Colman as Miss Havisham (giving her a creepier, more predatory vibe than we are used to seeing). We also have Fionn Whitehead as Pip, whose mixture of ambition and naivety that will shape his destiny is nicely drawn, Johnny Harris as Magwitch (a role, it seems, that is always required to be played with a mouthful of spit) and Shalom Brune-Franklin with an already fabulously disaffected performance as Estella. Do we need another Great Expectations? In no way. But this is standard, solid fare. LM

Sat, 3pm, Radio 4

An inventive – albeit questionably irreverent, given the real-life death toll – and dramatic treatment of the circumstances leading up to the crashes of two Boeing 737 Max aeroplanes in 2018 and 2019. We follow events from the perspective of the planes' internal electronic components: the bad-tempered but prescient black box recorder (Fenella Woolgar) has misgivings from the start but she's patronised and dismissed by the microchip and the engine as she explores the possibility that the crashes could have been caused by more than simple pilot error. Phil Harrison

So Long, My Son

Saturday, 9pm, BBC Four

In this heartbreaking drama from Wang Xiaoshuai, family tragedy and state intolerance weigh heavily on the lives of its central characters. In China in the 1980s, dutiful factory workers Yaojun and Liyun (pitch-perfect performances from Wang Jingchun and Yong Mei) have one young son, Xingxing, but when Liyun becomes pregnant, the communist government's one-child rule means she has to terminate it. Then an incident involving Xingxing and his best friend Haohao throws that decision into the harshest of reliefs. The poignant story seesaws between the decades, as circumstances improve for many – but Yaojun and Liyun's pain seems too deeply engrained for joy to creep in. Simon Wardell

Lynch/Oz

Wednesday, 11.35pm, Film4
The manifold connections between the 1939 classic The Wizard of Oz and the works of David Lynch are poked at and stretched out in this fascinating essay film. Writers such as Amy Nicholson and directors including John Waters and Karyn Kusama each take an angle – Lynch as Dorothy; red shoes and curtains; the Hollywood dream v reality – and have fun with it, amid a wealth of clips and the odd deliciously gnomic utterance from the shock-headed genius himself. SW

The Portable Door

Friday, 2.30pm, 8pm, Sky Cinema Premiere
The first book in Tom Holt's JW Wells & Co series of fantasy novels hits the screen in Jeffrey Walker's spiffing comedy. It's all a bit Harry Potter and the Half-Witted Intern, as Patrick Gibson's eager but seemingly unqualified trainee joins a firm of "paranatural engineers". They use magic to change people's actions – such as a meet-cute or a family reunion – but owner Humphrey Wells (Christoph Waltz) has bigger plans. With a scene-stealing Sam Neill as Wells's colleague and plenty of Pratchett-like oddity, it's a fun addition to the venerable legacy of British weird fiction. SW

Inside Llewyn Davis

Saturday, 9pm, AMC
How far should you go as an artist to stay true to your vision? That's the problem facing downbeat early 1960s Greenwich Village folk singer Llewyn (Oscar Isaac, holding his own in the vocal/guitar stakes). He's surviving by couch-surfing and borrowing a few dollars while seeking a break, but misplacing a friend's cat tips him over into a run of truly bad luck, as the New York City winter chills his blood. In the Coen brothers' typically wry style, comedy and crisis vie for space, and the folk music scene (just) before Dylan appeared is wonderfully evoked. SW

Pete's Dragon

Sunday, 3pm, BBC One
Before he unleashes his version of Peter Pan on the world, here's David Lowery's entertaining take on another much-loved Disney character. When his parents die in a car crash while the family are driving through a forest, Pete (Oakes Fegley) survives and is befriended by a green dragon he names Elliot. Six years later, the now-feral child is found and taken to a logging town by Bryce Dallas Howard's kindly ranger. It's an adventure with King Kong vibes and a strong ecological message, as Elliot – and the trees he hides in – come under threat. SW

Herself

Monday, 11.15pm, BBC Two
The Iron Lady director Phyllida Lloyd picks another forthright female character in this empowering drama, co-written by and starring Clare Dunne. Her Dublin mother, Sandra, fleeing an abusive marriage, sees a solution to temporary accommodation in building her own house. Harriet Walter plays the well-off woman happy to donate her garden, while Conleth Hill grumps about as the builder slowly drawn in by Sandra's desperate optimism. It's a Loachian tale with some of the sharp edges sanded down, but it rarely loses sight of the social realities. SW

ET: The Extra-Terrestrial

Good Friday, 5.45pm, ITV2
You could go the obvious route on Good Friday and watch King of Kings (10am, BBC Two) with Jeffrey Hunter as Jesus. Or you could get your Easter fix with a cute little alien in Steven Spielberg's family sci-fi thriller-cum-Christ allegory. After being sent down to Earth, ET suffers the little children, brings things back to life, dies and is resurrected, then ascends to the heavens (and his human friend Elliott's mother is called Mary). Spielberg's childlike sense of wonder and suspicion of the adult world pervade a film of many miraculous moments. SW

Your eyes are designed to perform at their best in natural daylight which is why they often struggle in artificial light. This can lead to eyestrain when reading for any length of time or doing any kind of close-up work.

The Alex Light uses LED Daylight Wavelength Technology™ to recreate the spectrum of natural daylight. The result is unsurpassed clarity and colour rendition. Words are crisp and clear and images rich and vibrant. Its soothing, natural looking light means you can read or work for hours in complete comfort.

- No more eyestrain with Daylight Wavelength Technology™
- Energy-efficient LED technology offers crystal clear clarity
- Superior versatility with robust flexible arm and dimmer controls
- Receive a light fully hand-built here in Great Britain
- Recommended by over 500 independent opticians
- 30 day risk-free trial and a 5 year warranty
